

National Symposium on
Desiring Bharat, historicizing the “postcolonial”

28-30 September, 2018

Organised by:

Dr Saswat Samay Das
Associate Professor
Department of Humanities and Social Sciences
Indian Institute of Technology Kharagpur
Kharagpur 721 302, West Bengal, India

Overview

It will be interesting to mark the readily available intellectual lenses that we may use to view our nation. The Machiavellian way of coming to terms with our nation will be to view it as a "molarity" or better an organism with firm boundaries. On the other hand, there lies the quasi-populist, mythopoeic, religious and intensely lyrical way of coming to terms with it as a sacred interior space, a way some mockingly call "hagiographic". The hybrid postcolonial poststructuralist way is to reduce the nation to an empty signifier or to view it in creative aesthetical terms, ranging from a lyrical diversity in expanse to a pulsating vibrating busy thoroughfare.

But the question at this juncture is: Are these approaches adequate to understand the strong, confident, technologically advanced, rapidly globalizing nation such as ours, a nation we may proudly pin down as the post-post-colonial Bharat, a fresh cornucopia of possibilities triumphantly distanced from all those prescribed ways of representing the so called postcolonial India? Indeed, how does one need to understand the emergent Bharat in the global times, situated beyond the postcolonial India that according to many remains self deludingly wedded to the notion of messy cultural hybridity? What is the best way for a nation like ours to reconstruct itself in the light of those futural possibilities that many claim that the emergent Bharat holds? Moreover, it is claimed, at this juncture, that our nation seems desirous to engineer a line of flight towards its foundational roots, to what may be called its pure originary non-secular past, blissfully distanced from the post-structuralist gaze? The question for the nation at this juncture is not only how to expand and merge with the borderless globality that Negri calls Empire but how to do that while striving to reclaim its autochthonous self and secure its unique position in the Empire which resembles a rhizome and which continuously gives a sense of being in the middle?

It is also imperative at this juncture to tailor a new grammar to live and encounter the emergent Bharat. It may be argued that the best way to come to terms with Bharat is to foreground it in creative aesthetic terms as an exercise in double articulation. The emergent Bharat could be seen as "a lobster with double pincers". What could this image possibly indicate? In contrast with post-structuralist post colonialist hermeneutics that positions India's cultural diversity on a line of flight leading to a void or an unrecognizable messiness Bharat could be rendered as an assemblage, a formation that works with blocs, stratas, cuts and flows. The emergent Bharat will be a pleasant combination of lyrical, open ended poetic intensity of Vedas, scriptures and ancient texts and equally indelible traces of Machiavellian politics directed towards guarding and disseminating this intensity. It will be a performance that will speak to the rhizomatic global sometime as the Gramscian ideological bloc. And sometimes it will be a performance betraying deep affinity with the Althusserian notion of interest or may even be a reflection of the productive desire. It will essentially be a bharat that will remain permanently elusive to those attempting to contain it, in particular the manipulative pro capitalist hermeneutical strategies. But it will also toy with them for guarding its interest and working with the patterns of connective desire.

Objective

This symposium will stage interesting ways of articulating the contours of emerging Bharat and will also engineer hermeneutical strategies to encounter it. It will also arrive at a post postcolonial way of arriving at the terminals or stratas of nativity, indigeneity and identity without succumbing the poststructuralist way of figuring them as malignant tumors and lumps that a nation must remove from its body if it wants to be integrated with the existing Empire of incessant flows.

This symposium will make way for lectures, critique and effective interactive sessions from scholars of Indian aesthetics, theory, linguistics, political critics and commentators and some very prominent voices in Indian postcolonial studies. The following areas will be debated, discussed:

"Territories"/lecture Content

1. Archiving the postcolonial
2. Expanding the Indian Conceptual framework
3. De-stratifying the Indian Knowledge systems: Aurobindo, Gandhi and Vivekananda
4. De-stabilizing the "post" of postcolonial in the Indian Context
5. From Schizophrenization to "stability": Self, society and nation in India
6. Schizoanalyzing cultural politics as "the problem field" in modern India
7. De-territorializing India and Reterritorializing "Hindoo-stan"/Bharat: colonialism, post-colonialism and national culture
8. Spiritual politics: Science, spirituality and modernization in India
9. De-gendering India: Women and Vedas
10. Beyond the Western Eyes: Theorizing feminism in Indian context
11. Rethinking Democracy and beyond
12. The thesis of (dis) continuity: Indian Identity and culture continuity in world of philosophy
13. Indian Mysticism and Contemporary western Episteme
14. Reconstructing Ambedkar: Politics of Double articulation
